Personal Statement: What role did Aeromodelling play in your life and what are your aspirations for the future?

Aeromodelling has been my passion for a long time and I have been interested in it since the times of primary school. From the very beginning of my adventure with this hobby I was interested in competition and participation in contests, which required me to devote ample amount of time to trainings and relevant trips so that I could gain experience and significantly improve my skills.

Aeromodelling has indisputably taught me a lot - owing to it I have earned qualities such as: durability, self-confidence, regularity, willingness to learn from the better and more experienced, and endurance in my untiring attempts to achieve more successes in spite of frequent failures. Taking part in various competitions proved to be for me a school of strategic thinking and taught me how to cope with stress. Among some vital features I have developed are: manual skills, three dimensional imagination, theoretical and practical knowledge about aerodynamics, mechanics and structural materials. These skills allow me to design and create different objects and elements by myself. Participation in contests has also taught me interpersonal skills and the importance of team-working, frankness with other people and open-mindedness towards other cultures and nationalities.

Currently, during the season I am spending almost my whole free time on training and preparation for competitions. Even though scarifying so much time for my hobby can be demanding, I really do not regret any moment of it because I believe it has become an essential part of my life.

In the future I really look forward to continuing not only my adventure with aeromodelling but also to the opportunity to study aviation as my major in the hope of broadening my knowledge. I am strongly convinced that the experience gained so far will give me a great outlook for my future and provide me with further possibilities of education. My dream is to study at the possibly best university in order to possess the great expertise which I could put into practice and, in the future, develop into completed projects.
